

Rainbow of Light

Isaac Newton wanted to understand light. He used a prism to determine that white light is actually made up of different colors—or wavelengths—of light. When white light enters a prism, its different wavelengths are separated and show up as a band of colors. The longest wavelengths occur on the red end of the spectrum; the shortest reside on the opposite end where the violet color appears.

